Bare-Backed Gown for London Dancers

(INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE) LONDON—In the face of threatened coal shortage, is it to be a bare-backed Winter in London's West End? Viola Tree, in the last act of "Her Dancing Master," set tongues wagging regarding the Winter's styles by wearing a gown that was backless from the waist up, and secured over either shoulder by a string of beads. "I think such frocks are ideal in the ballroom," she said, when interviewed as to whether she was two jumps ahead of future styles.

"Nothing is nicer than feeling the muscles of the back ripple when dancing. All the dresses I have seen in Paris are backless."

But there's a rift. The West End fashion dictators don't agree.

"Bare backs and a powerful coal strike! Not likely!" said one. "Besides, most women found this whim too expensive. It entailed too many visits to the massagers for polishing and remoulding, for the back needs even more attention than the face."

There are 348 Building Sites in "Sheffield"

—But Only on 37 Can There be any Business Buildings Built

—And There Are Only 10 Business Sites Left Now.

Whiting is a closely knit, and intensely built up municipality. She has a larger population to the square foot than any other of her sister cities in Lake County. Her residential streets are built up solidly, and the result is that Whiting's population is gradually shifting west to Robertsdale, for this territory offers the only place where this surplus population can live.

There is very little business property for sale in Whiting or Robertsdale—at least at prices such as we offer. Particularly is this so in "Sheffield" and the subdivisions which surround it. It is practically all restricted to residential uses.

With the developing of these new subdivisions in Robertsdale, these people will have to have some place to do their shopping. AND THE LOGICAL PLACE IS INDIANAPOLIS BOULEVARD. This street has been paved at the county's expense. The cost of the cement walk has been paid in full. So carrying charges will be very small.

The Business Sites on Indianapolis Boulevard are 30 Feet Wide—Remember That the Usual Business Site is only 25 Feet Wide.

Most everybody in Whiting today remembers the time when its business district centered around the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway station. Here was located Henry Schrage's bank, and the Putnam Block, which was Whiting's Hub. As the town grew westward, so went its business district, and today, many blocks away from what was once Whiting's original business center, you will find modern and up-to-date business structures, such as Gordon's Department Store, Robert A. Gordon Building, the Berkowitz Building, the Slovak Dom, and many others. The new Community House, costing over $400,000, will also be built in the west part of the city.

One of the men who came to Whiting in the early days, and had confidence in Whiting's real estate, was Henry Schrage—and in those days it took not alone a man with a vision, but also with a determination. He bought, and bought, and bought—and we believe that Henry Schrage's fortune today was founded to a very great extent upon the real estate investments he made in the early days. And, remember, in those days we had no street car systems, no telephone systems, no large industries employing thousands of people, and nothing but a hope—today we have a reality.

But, as is usually the case, most of the money made upon business property is made by outside purchasers—for the local investor generally does not believe that his own town is going to be as big as the outside man does. So the non-resident gets the pick, and the resident makes the value for him. This was particularly true in Gary, Whiting and East Chicago.

We are going to tell you about a few of the People who lived outside Whiting, but who had the Courage to buy its Business Property and let the facts speak:

For instance, Peter W. Meyn, president of Gostlin, Meyn & Hastings, of Hammond, only a year ago bought a 25 foot business lot on 119th Street, near Oliver. He paid $3000 for it—he has recently refused an offer of $6000 for it.

Then another Hammond man, Frank Ducomb, bought the Harr property on 119th Street. He paid $14,500 for it. And today he would not take $25,000 for it.

M. Rothschild of Hammond is the owner of the Princess Theatre and Seifer's store building. We can give you no figures on it, but Mr. Rothschild claims it as one of the best investments he ever made.

Mrs. Conroy bought the corner of Central Avenue and 119th Street for $2000.00. She sold this property a short time afterward for $3500.00, and this purchaser in turn sold it to Robert Gordon for $4500.00.

Now we come to "Sheffield" profits. The triangular piece of real estate where Calumet Avenue and Indianapolis Boulevard converge, and which formerly was used as a filling station by the Standard Oil Co. was recently sold to Carl Winkleried, the proprietor of the Geneva House. He paid $9000 for it. He has been offered $15,000, and we hate to tell you what price he is asking for it now. These prices might look big to you if you thought you had to invest $10,000 or more in order to speculate on a business site—

But we are going to Offer the Remaining 10 Unsold Business Lots on Indianapolis Boulevard next SATURDAY for $1,500 for each And all that is needed is $100 for the 30-foot Initial Payment and the Balance can be paid at the Rate of $25.00 Per Month.

Take your city map—study it, note where the big money has been made on Whiting real estate and make up your mind to buy one of these business sites before the other fellow beats you to it—for we believe that every single business site will be sold by Saturday night.
